- On 25 July the Chinese Communist-North Korean Army Joint General Headquarters approved a plan to organize a secondary defense line north of the 39th parallel. Troop concentrations in the western sector will be in the P'yongyang-Yongyu (125-36, 39-18) (YD-2453) - Sunch'on (125-56, 39-25) (YD-5267) triangle; concentrations in the eastern sector will be in the Kowon (127-15, 39-26) (CU-4966) - Munch'on (127-17, 39-17) (CU-5249) - Sinch'ang-ni (126-08, 39-25) (BU-5367) area.
- Elements of the following Communist units will man these positions:
  - North Korean IV, V, VI, VII, and VIII Corps.
  - Units of the Chinese Communist 15 Army Group<sup>1</sup> and the 47 and 50 Armies of the 13 Army Group.
- Combined General Headquarters designated the 1 Army (sic) of the Chinese Communist 20 Army Group as a reserve in Anju, and major elements of the Chinese Communist 9 Army Group as a reserve force in the Hamhung area.
- Prior to the decision to adopt this plan, GHQ had decided to bolster front-line units. Some units now intended for the 39th parallel line were moved to the front-line area at that time.
- No new Chinese Communist replacements have arrived in Korea since mid-June. Lately, Chinese Communist units sustaining battle losses were being reinforced by immediate reserve units.

6. In late July most Chinese Communist wounded were being evacuated to Manchuria or China. Evacuation caused speculation that large Chinese Communist forces were withdrawing from Korea.<sup>2</sup>

25X1 1. [ ] Comment. According to available information, in late July the 15 Army Group was reported in south China, exact location and subordination unknown.

25X1 2. [ ] Comment. This is possibly the basis for the statement by a Korean Methodist minister who reported desertions of groups of Chinese soldiers across the Yalu River prior to July, according to press dispatches.
